Wallace Smith, author of "Are You Decent?" depicting vaudevillians off stage is to immortalize Sid Grauman's prologue folks with a similar collection of stories. Smith is shown here with a few of his collection of casts. He is also prominent as a scenarist, set and costume designer for the screen world.

HOLLYWOOD—Intimate phases of the lives of prologue players and celebrities, even of Sid Grauman, the impresario himself, following the success achieved by "Are You Decent?" a volume dedicated to vaudevillians, are to be disclosed in another series of tales by Wallace Smith, well-known author and artist.
Smith has discovered that the players in the prologues to such big film productions as are staged in Grauman's Chinese Theatre live in a Thespian world all their own, and he proposes to acquaint the public with their lives and loves, their frailties and virtues, in the same rollickingly intimate manner that characterizes the tales of the "two a day" in his latest volume of the press.

The trials and tribulations of theatrical boarding-house life are dealt with in engaging fashion in "Are You Decent?" which gets its title from the backstage custom of a caller shouting "Are you decent?" before opening a comrade's dressing room door to find out if the occupant is sufficiently clad to receive visitors.
Smith plans to lift the veil of mystery that surrounds the famed beauties and novelty specialists who stand apart from vaudeville, the drama and the films, in introducing the big screen productions, with principal characters running through the look, as he has described the vicissitudes of those who lived in Mrs. Fisher's select boarding-house "strictly for the profession."

The author was widely known as a wire and foreign correspondent before he came to Hollywood to write and point for the films, where he is under contract to United Artists. He wrote the story for "Venice of Venice," Constance Talmadge's picture; and "Two Arabian Knights," with Wolheim and Boyd. He is the author of more than 50 well-known short stories and has prepared the illustrations for 10 major books.
